

Do You Open Your Mouth

Like a young bird and gulp down whatever food or medicine may be offered you? Or, do you want to know something of the composition and character of that which you take into your stomach whether as food or medicine?

Most intelligent and sensible people now-a-days insist on knowing what they employ whether as food or as medicine.

Dr. Pierce believes they have a perfect right to INSIST upon such knowledge. So he publishes, broadcast and on each bottle-wrapper, what his medicines are made of and verifies it under oath. This he feels he can well afford to do because the more the ingredients of which his medicines are made are studied and understood the more will their superior curative virtues be appreciated.

For the cure of woman's peculiar weaknesses and derangements, giving rise to frequent headache, backache, dragging-down pain or distress and kindred symptoms of weakness, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a most efficient remedy. It is equally effective in giving strength to nursing mothers and in preparing the system of the expectant mother for baby's coming, thus rendering childbirth safe and comparatively painless. The "Favorite Prescription" is a most potent, strengthening tonic to the general system and to the organs distinctly feminine in particular. It is also a soothing and invigorating nerve and cures nervous exhaustion, nervous prostration, neuralgia, hysteria, spasms, chorea or St. Vitus's dance, and other distressing nervous symptoms attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the distinctly feminine organs.

A host of medical authorities of all the several schools of practice, recommend each of the several ingredients of which "Favorite Prescription" is made for the cure of the diseases for which it is claimed to be a cure. You may read what they say for yourself by sending a postal card request for a free booklet of extracts from the leading authorities, to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., and it will come to you by return post.

It's foolish and often dangerous to experiment with new or but slightly tested medicines—sometimes urged upon the afflicted as "just as good" or better than "Favorite Prescription." The dishonest dealer sometimes insists that he knows what the proffered substitute is made of, but you don't and it is decidedly for your interest that you should know what you are taking into your stomach and system expecting it to act as a curative. To him its only a difference of profit. Therefore, insist on having Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

CONGRESSMAN LANGLEY AS SEEN BY THE PRESS

WOULD AID VETERANS.

After the completion of bills on the unanimous consent calendar yesterday, General Keifer called up the pension appropriation bill, and the House at once resolved itself into the committee of the whole and took up the consideration of this measure.

One of the most interesting speeches of the day was that delivered by Representative Langley, of Kentucky, who occupied the attention of the House for more than an hour. He began his remarks by deprecating the tendency which has been shown by some men in high places recently to seek or revive what he termed "the prejudices and passions of the old rebellion days."

"There are some men," declared Mr. Langley, "who do not seem to realize that the war is over, although the echo of the last shot died away nearly half a century ago."

Turning to his Republican colleagues, he said:

"Let us live for the present and the future, and not in the memories of the dead and buried past. If we expect to win future political contests, we must do it by standing upon living issues and by relying upon the record which we have made with the power that the American people have placed in our hands."

He paid an eloquent tribute to the Southern people and to the old Confederates, who, he declared, have accepted the results of the war in good faith, and are now contributing their share toward making the nation happier, better and greater. This sentiment was liberally applauded on both sides of the House.

Mr. Langley directed attention to the fact that more than one hundred members of the House have introduced pension bills all designed to make the present system more liberal, and intimated strongly that a good many of these bills were evidently introduced for home consumption. He contended that the soldiers could not be blamed for becoming dubious of the motives of the members who introduced bills and then let them die in committee without making an effort to get them considered. He obtained a unanimous consent to insert in the Record a summary of the pension bills that have been introduced, and the names of the authors of such bills, and contended that if they were all in earnest when they introduced these bills and would join with him, something more would be accomplished for the soldiers at this session of Congress.

Mr. Langley criticized the practice of passing private pension bills which resulted in favoring a few against the many, and contended that a general law ought to be passed, providing a liberal pension for all veterans of the Mexican and civil wars who are without other means of support. The principal part of his speech however was devoted to a discussion of his bill providing pensions for State militiamen who aided in the suppression of the rebellion.

The argument by Mr. Langley on this question attracted a great deal of attention from the members present, more than a score of whom interrupted him during his speech.

He showed great familiarity with the question, and was warmly congratulated by many of his colleagues who assured him that his arguments had put the militia pension question to them in a stronger light than they had ever had it presented before. He was interrupted several times by Representative Sulloway, chairman of the committee on invalid pensions, before which committee his militia bill is pending. He challenged any member present to arise and give a good reason while these militiamen should not be placed on the pension roll, but there was no response.

Mr. Langley also advocated the repeal of all laws making prior Confederate service a bar to pension, and said that he favored placing a monument over the graves of the Confederate dead, as is now done in the cases of Union soldiers. He also expressed his regret that Governor Willson had felt it his duty to veto the Confederate pension bill, recently passed by the Kentucky Legislature.—Washington Post, March 22, 1910

LANGLEY'S PLEA FOR KENTUCKY

In his recent speech upon the tariff Hon. John W. Langley, of Kentucky, commanded the attention of the members of the House of Representatives by his direct statements, meeting as they did the questions at issue without evasion; by his display of full knowledge of his subject and of the records of both parties and of the various leaders upon tariff schedules; and by his warning to his party associates that departure from the principle of protection as far as the interests of Kentucky and the South were concerned meant the renunciation of Republican hopes for political gains in the State and the South.

He adopted General Hancock's views as to the tariff being a local question, and made it plain that while he was in favor of protection generally he did not propose that his district, State or section should go without its full share.

One of the features of his address was reading the following plank from the Democratic national platform of 1884: "The necessary reduction and taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wage prevailing in this country."

Mr. Langley pronounced that Democratic utterance as "pretty good Republican doctrine."

His speech was one of the most effective that has yet been delivered on the subject, and he made it clear that the Republicans of the North could not carry through a tariff measure that protected the interest of that section alone, and as he aptly and forcibly expressed it, would not break the "Solid South" commercially rather than politically.

Mr. Langley scored a success in treating the question from a business standpoint rather than from the view of a political partisan.—Editorial in Cincinnati Enquirer, May 1, 1909.

CLARK COUNTY REIMBURSED

The backwater resulting from the improvement of the Kentucky River necessitated the construction of a bridge over Upper Howard's Creek near Allensville in this county. The county put in the bridge at a cost of $2,727.05. In the last session of Congress, the Tenth District Representative in Congress, Hon. John W. Langley introduced a bill to reimburse the county for the expenditure.

At 5 o'clock Friday afternoon Judge J. H. Evans received the following telegram:

Washington, D. C., Jan. 15, 1909.
